Keith Publications LLC, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .If it hadn t been for Alek s hands dropping onto her shoulders, anchoring her in place, she would have slammed into the psycho from the woods. Can Alek come out to play? the man asked in the same child s voice used to trick her into opening the door. Her brain labored to process the fact the little boy was this tall, lean man, with his arms crossed loosely over his chest, his shoulder propped casually against the door jamb. Angry brown stains marred the front of his tattered shirt. Mud stuck to his black pants. His hair hung past his shoulders in dirty, thin strands. He didn t even look at Alek. He focused on her. His anticipation and hunger to devour her slid around her body, his wickedness became an oppressive cocoon. A horrifying apparition with eyes so black the pupil melded with the iris, and skin, the pallor of someone who had been sick for a long, long time. The crazed look in his black eyes told her his sickness wasn t physical. Geneva. Behind me. Now. Alek s cool, steady voice was in direct opposition to the terror and sense of evil that drenched her more than the wild rain pushing through the open door. Her instincts screamed danger and pushed her to run from the man at the door. Behind Alek didn t seem far enough. She sprinted for the bedroom, for Alek s strange, lethal weapon. Her foot collapsed under the pressure. She crashed to the floor. Her knees and palms stung, ankle pulsed, heart raced. She flipped to face the stranger, scraped her butt against the floor until she scooted back as far as the...
