Arthur H.Stockwell Ltd, 2008. Soft cover. Condition: New. The history of the famine in Ulster is a tale of misery and sickness, in keeping with the situation in the rest of Ireland. It is significant that the people of Ulster today - mostly Protestants - do not blame the policies of the British Government for the blight on the potatoes. By the beginning of 1850 the blight had taken its course, and the land once again yielded a good crop of potatoes. Today, in Ulster, potatoes are a favourite dish, and there is little prospect that the conditions of the mid-nineteenth century in Ireland will ever be repeated.
